TALKING ABOUT MY SCHOOL

2nd High School of Ilioupolis, Athens, Greece

Dear friends!

Our school is in a very beautiful spot in Ilioupoli, a south east suburb of Athens. It is located on the mountain called Imitos and it has a fantastic view to the sea!

Our school is the "2nd junior high school" It has got three floors. The originality of our school compared to the other schools is that pupils can change classes according to their lesson. So when we have literacy lesson or Mathematics we go to the second floor. When we have technology we go to the ground floor and for our French and English lessons we go ahead to the third floor! One advantage in our school is that we have our own lockers! So when we have a lesson we take only the relevant books and we leave our bag inside the lockers.

OUR TOWN

Grombalia is a Tunisian city located in the Nabeul Governorate in the North-East of Tunisia. Its population is 18,856hab. It's a about forty kilometers southeast of Tunis, known mainly for its vineyards. The agricultural town celebrated on August 2015 the 56th edition of its traditional and colorful "Vineyard Festival" retracing the town's long history of wine making since the Carthagians. Our city is twinned with the town of Cisterna di Latina, Italy.

According to the International Organization for Migration (IOM), up to 3,072 people died or disappeared in 2014 in the Mediterranean while trying to migrate to Europe. Overall estimates are that over 22,000 migrants died between 2000 and 2014.

In 2014, 283,532 migrants irregularly entered the European Union, mainly following the Central Mediterranean, Eastern Mediterranean routes. 220,194 migrants crossed EU sea borders in the Central, Eastern and Western Mediterranean. Half of them had come from Syria, Eritrea and Afghanistan.

Of those arriving in Southern Europe in 2014, the vast majority arrived in Italy through Libya, whereas a minority arrived in Greece through Turkey. 62,000 applied for asylum in Italy, but most Syrians and Eritreans, who comprised almost half of the arrivals in Italy in 2014, did not stop in Italy, but continued their journey towards northern Europe, Germany and Sweden in particular.

In 2015, a shift took place, with Greece overtaking Italy as the primary point of arrival and surpassing in the first six months of 2015 the numbers for the whole of 2014: 67,500 people arrived in Italy, mainly coming from Eritrea, Nigeria and Somalia, whereas 68,000 arrived on the islands of Greece, mainly coming from Syria and Afghanistan. In total, 137,000 migrants crossed the Mediterranean into Europe in the first six months of 2015.

In early August 2015, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees said that 250,000 migrants had arrived in Europe by sea so far in 2015, 124,000 in Greece and 98,000 in Italy. According to IOM and UNHCR estimates, around one million migrants and refugees arrived in Europe till 21 December 2015, three to four times more than in 2014. Just 3% came by land to Bulgaria and Greece; the rest came by sea to Greece, Italy, Spain, Cyprus and Malta. The vast majority arrived by sea in Greece (816,752); 150,317 arrived by sea in Italy, with a slight drop from 170,000 in 2014. Half of those crossing the Mediterranean were from Syria, 20% were from Afghanistan and 7% from Iraq. IOM estimated that a total of 3,692 migrants and refugees lost their lives in the Mediterranean in 2015 – over 400 more than in 2014 – of whom 2,889 in the Central Mediterranean and 731 in the Aegean sea.

War forces Syrians to leave their homes. As soon as the bombing reaches some areas, they have to leave for a safer place.. What remains is the story of that escape, that particular day is the day they leave everything behind and the stories are so touching to hear.

REFUGEES' STORIES

eTwinning 2015/2016

Dear Readers,

The e-magazine we are presenting to you has been created by the students and teachers of five secondary schools who for the last ten months have been collaborating on an eTwinning project called Does the Earth have borders? Migration and Human Rights. The focus of our work was the plight of modern-day refugees who are forced to flee their homelands and seek safety and peace in Europe.

We have been trying to look at their ordeal from their perspective. Our students have come up with their own personal definitions of the word 'home' and have packed their 'refugee bags'. Our German partners had an opportunity to experience a refugee's journey participating in an interactive Exhibition on the Theme of Escape held in Kiel. The Italian group interviewed Bakary, 'New Odysseus' from Mali.

The name Odysseus does not appear here by chance, because to help our students understand the current migrant crisis in Europe we encouraged them to analyse the extracts from two ancient epic poems, Homer's Odyssey and Virgil's Aeneid. Moreover, they were expected to study the history of the Middle East and keep up-to-date with the situation in Europe.

The e-magazine we are sharing with you is the result of our pupils' work. We hope you find it an interesting read,
